

Performance: FLIPPING CANCER

Thursday November 10, 2:00 pm - 3:45 pm CIS

#3020, USF-Tampa

Presented by the Department of Communication in collaboration with the Judy Genshaft Honors College

2:00 pm – FLIPPING CANCER, an interactive performance about health justice.

3:30 pm – Post-show dialogue.

Join colleagues from Communication, the Honors College, Humanities, USF-Health and more to explore why cancer stories matter and how they might improve clinical care.

In theater/story, dance/movement and visual landscapes, FLIPPING CANCER adapts interviews with people who face advanced cancers as patients, family members, caregivers, and healthcare providers.

Co-performed by Marie Garlock, Ph.D., with USF Tampa participants. Live music by Stacy Grove, M.Div.

Visit itisinyou.org/participate-usf to join the ensemble.

Come engage the wisdoms of people facing cancers. What can we learn about healthcare from centering stage IV cancer perspectives, or about health equity from people living in environmental sacrifice zones? What happens when we open space for issues often considered too taboo for cancer fundraising campaigns? How can patient-centered perspectives act as a compass for policy and culture change?

 CIS-3020 "The Performance Lab" is located on the 3rd floor of the Zimmerman building i.e., Communication & Information Sciences building*
